

Time Well Spent Online

By Donna Bishop

Searching and shopping online using the internet can be time well spent. It's so easy and fun you may discover you charged more than you meant.

No need to shower, dress or brush your hair before leaving the house. Turn on your computer, type in a few key strokes and start moving your mouse.

Shopping for EBooks is time well spent; many are sold for less than a dollar. Thousands are available free or at low cost so almost anyone can be a scholar.

Type in a title or author and up pops your choice in the form of a digital book. The ease of one-click shopping delivers it instantly to your PC, Kindle or Nook.

Have you tried doing your grocery shopping online? Talk about time well spent. It will save time and effort but unfortunately it won't save a single dollar or cent.

Sit in front of your computer scanning the shelves at Walmart just gawking. Or type your item in the Search Box and let the computer do the walking.

No longer do you need to fight traffic and crowds or be distracted in thousands of directions. On the website for your favorite store click on the item you desire and see their full selection.

Shopping online is time well spent because now you have more time for whatever pleases you. Perhaps cooking or reading or writing or doing volunteer work or even trying something new.
