

Pity the Man Whose Time is Well Spent

By Dennis Payton Knight

Pity the man who never wastes time,
He spends all his day in pursuit of the dime.

He'll take not a moment to amble the trail,
To kick cans up the street,
To make kites he can sail.

He misses the chance to drown worms in the creek,
To play king of the mountain,
Or hide and go seek.

He maintains his focus on paying the rent,
He's missing the fun,
But his time is well spent.
