

Signs

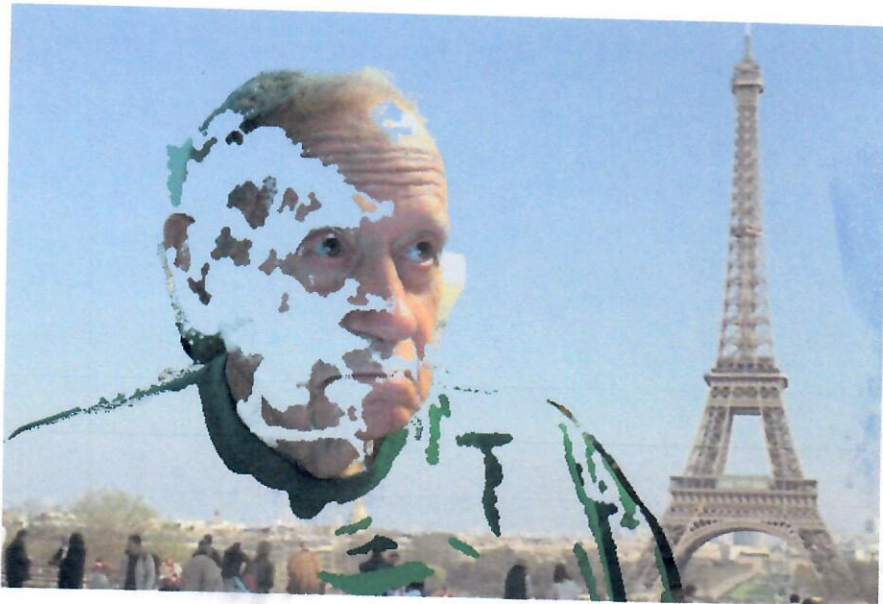

by Harry Zirkelbach 1 May 2017
Stars and Sun date 34773

How appropriate. This topic suggested on the very day so many of the world have as a special sign, May Day. Imagine the difference to the individual standing at Red Square, and to an aviator announcing potential disaster. It is always where you stand that makes any sign significant. Here with Writers I have every expectation that neither example cited caused you any alarm.

Until literacy became common, communication between individuals depended on signs. And it is still common between friends. Woe to the mate who forgets the others birthday, wedding Anniversary, name.

Factually, civilization progresses, is enhanced, when signs are universally recognized. Third World Immigrants are entering the developed world constantly. Imagine the threat to them and their new friend, should the immigrant not recognize the importance of the traffic Red Light, any traffic Sign, or be unable to read and understand the local language..

Even we in these United States are threatened on the road when a fellow traveller doesn't accept the rules and signs, hit our vehicle, threatens our health. Compound that with a series of distracted drivers. And now, Artificial Intelligence is added to the mix. The roadway becomes a place to avoid, the source of every local TV's Breaking News blast ,where the audience prays this doesn't involve some friend, the need to attend still another funeral.

And as for each in Writer,
this can't end without
Some Sign Off.

Amen.

-30-