

Things I Get Tired of

05-11-2015 by Harry Zirkelbach

Social Security payments for forty-four years enable me to have a Social Security check for every month the subsequent years, 33 years so far. In the rear view mirror of life, not a bad investment, for me.

We insure our cars, home, selves against that unforeseen moment when a disaster might strike, harm vehicles and occupants, the house and contents, and early departure. In all the years of making these payments, few claims. One when a daughter almost under her mother's eyes, lit a match set fire to room of ladies dresses, in the the basement of our home. Then in 2008, a motorist backing up on a one way street struck our car as I tried to avoid his, our insurance paid the damage repair cost. Still I consider the relatively small yearly payments a reasonable investment for protection provided myself, family, complete strangers.

What's to object?

It's personal.

Tell me.

Don't you find the ever increasing Television ads, that ask the viewer to consider lining their pockets with money, for some imaginary or real automobile infraction no matter the gravity. What are you talking about? You know, take from those with money, give to the deserving, that imaginary TV audience.

That's your Auto Insurance Premium these TV lawyers are urging you to donate in huge amounts to their client. And while the injured party is delighted to say "Fred got me 1.2 million dollars", that is probably not true, for they are stating the settlement, not the amount they retained.

Time to volunteer for Jury duty, correct these alleged judgments.
