There are games in which the participants playing for the crowd, often becomes professionally paid, to obscene heights.

The noise and encouragement of witnesses do not directly affect the concentration of those contestants.

Such contests are numerous, involve physical exertion, require little listening.

Other games involving humans, can require seclusion of the warriors. Chess and Bridge come to mind; are mental contests.

The game I have in mind today, is life.
Just the individual, seeking to complete "today",
'cause that's all there is.

The opponent, and at times the biggest support, self.
All that's needed, know where you are, where you're going.

Plans are made, the ship sets sail,
the adventure continues, treasured memories at every sighting.

This is the game of "life" played, with a crew of selectees, casual friends, strangers, you with top billing.
Sail on, enjoy the journey; it's what you make of your game;
recall, you are only there once every moment.

Remain the winner you set out to be.
I hope you can hear, feel, enjoy, life's excitement,
as I do in mentioning it.
