The Road Not Taken

How often have you heard someone say, "I should have, I would have, I could have, if I had only known."

It doesn't matter what the "should have, would have, could have," is, it's the "if I had only known" that bothers me.

It is my theory that as a human being it is impossible to make an incorrect decision. For no matter what we are choosing to do, we can only rely on the information that we have on hand. If it is flawed, our decision will be flawed. If it is accurate our selection will be correct.

So make your choice and be happy that it is the one you have made. Good, bad, or indifferent it doesn't matter, you made a decision learn from it, and grow.

Robert Frost must have felt this way when he wrote "The Road Not Taken".

Mr. Frost did not waste time lamenting the fact that he could not take both roads, or that he may had chosen the wrong one. He simply says,

"Two roads diverged in a wood, and I
I took the one less traveled by,
And that has made all the difference."
