

Fragile Interlude

By Natalie Lawson

Retirement brings mutual trust and friendships and a wonderful feeling of freedom responsible only to myself. Even with some disabilities it is easy to join and become active in clubs and groups that we enjoy. Before you know it you're busy with responsibilities you never dreamed of, exercising with your whole body and soul. I am reasonably commanding myself to being involved without it consuming me like a job.

A job is for strong young people. Yes, I'll keep believing this because it enables me to enjoy the carefree freedom at a discreet distance from my children's jobs. I experience a little pride for them and pray they continue to develop character in their endeavors.

In this interlude of my life I am praying for living long enough to see Neutrality abroad and Unity at home, The United States of America!
